

Eric Hought (Experienced Horseman)

The rider must place his personal success on hold and elevate the performance of the horse to the fore front.

It is all about the success of the horse, not the rider. The 'job' of the rider is to learn as much as possible about how the horse learns and as many techniques possible to manage the horse to his highest level of achievement.

It is the rider's responsibility to see that the horse's self-confidence grows to the point that the horse thinks he is a tiger, YET totally under control."
